

In the current hair market, there are various problems when it comes to raw hair. The demand for high quality raw hair has grown and it has become extremely challenging to meet this demand. If you are one such person who faces a similar challenge then here is what you need to know with respect to raw hair:

1. Many customers need Indian hair, Brazilian hair, Peruvian hair, Malaysian hair etc. Actually, in the Chinese hair market, there is little of this hair but many suppliers say they have it and in reality they only have Asian hair.

2. Human hair grades - there are 3 main grades, including:

- Cuticle Remy Hair: This hair is very silky, smooth and has a very good drop. Use your hand or your tongue to touch the hair back and forth, if it is real cuticle remy, it will feel very smooth from the root to the tip, but little frictional feeling from tip to root. This hair is not too soft or thin because it is not processed in an acid bath. You also can test the tension with your natural hair. It should be almost the same. Another tool is to use a microscope, it will be easier to ascertain whether the cuticles exist or not.
- Remy Hair: It is very silky, smooth and very good drop. This hair should also follow the same direction, you can check the hair color, if it is remy hair, the tip should be a little bit darker than the root. Also this hair is a little softer and thinner than cuticle remy because it is processed in an acid bath to remove the cuticles to avoid tangling.
- Non-Remy Hair: This hair is not very silky and smooth when compared to the above remy hair. Because of the hair shed naturally, you will find black dots on the end of hair when you put the hair on a white background. Many manufacturers sell this hair as remy hair. They cut off the black dots, if you can check it carefully on both ends, you will find see the hair is Non Remy. Another way to test the quality is to wash and style. The non remy hair will be frizzy, dry and broken easily after just a few times.

3. Now more and more customers require the best quality hair, but from 2014, the raw hair is much rare and much more difficult to collect, especially, 18", 20" and 22", they are also the most lengthy and the price is much higher. This is a problem most factories face. Therefore, if you contact a supplier and realize that the price is cheaper than would be normally then that will raise a red flag and you will have to rethink.
